S.

S, the Latin capital, is taken with very little or no variation from the ancient Greek alphabet, and is at least of as great antiquity as that of the Scythian bow (Σ); and from this drawn into a smaller form is made s, which is used only as a final both in Greek and Latin, except in the compendiary note ϛ for στ. The Greeks have another, but less ancient, figure of this letter, viz. C, from which the smaller initial and medial ζ is sometimes used. The Scythian bow is taken from the Phenician alphabet without variation; as that is from the Hebrew שׁ sin, by drawing it in a jacent, instead of an erect, form. Hence the Dorians, who perhaps immediately received it from the Hebrews, as Herodotus and Pindar acquaint us, called this letter σαν, san, though the Ionians called it σιγμα, sigma, from the Chaldean סמכא simcha, by transposing the second and third letters: which opinion is made more probable by the small form of the Greek sigma σ, being no other than the ϛ turned to the right hand in complaisance to the western way of writing. But there are strong reasons to think ϛ samech only a secondary letter, substituted for שׁ sin, the better to distinguish it from שׂ schin; wherein they had done wisely, provided they had exterminated שׁ sin, which now seems supernumerary, because both these letters שׁ and ϛ, have one and the same sound, as appears from the Ephraimitish pronunciation of Shibboleth. And hence we may account for the different Greek names of this letter, san being so called from sin, before samech was introduced; and sigma from samech, after such introduction. But to proceed: the Greeks admit this letter into no class in the distribution of their alphabet, whether in honour to it, as being invested with a despotic power peculiar to itself, or in dishonour, looking upon it only as a substitute and attendant on the rest, is uncertain; but I should think the latter, since its servile offices are so very many in declining their nouns, and conjugating their verbs more especially. For in all future tenses of verbs baryton, and all the tenses derived from thence, with their participles in every conjugation, voice, and mode, this letter is servile; being explicit, implicit, or potential, in them all. And this servile use probably may have been the reason why some among the Greeks have accounted it only an aspiration; in which number was Plato the philosopher, who calls it the breathing letter. And indeed we find both the Greek spirits changed into this letter: into the lenis, as in ἔμμι, sum, ὄπος, succus; the aspirate more frequently, as in ἅλς, sal, ἓξ, sex, ἑπτα, septem. This may likewise have occasioned the neglect of it by the Romans in taking words from the Greeks, as in tego, fallo, from στεγω, σφαλλω, and sometimes in derivatives of their own, as in pumex from spuma. Certain it is, that some learned men among the Greeks avoided a frequent use of it. Plato and Eubulus, two comic poets, made sport in the theatre with this verse of Euripides, "Εσωσα σ' ὡς ἴσασιν Ἑλλήνων ὅσοι. Nay, Pindar was so unjustly severe, that he wrote several odes without it: and the whole Spartan nation preferred the canine snarl of Ῥ to the serpentine hiss of s. The Romans also melted it so much, especially in the end of words, as scarcely to be heard; insomuch that even in writing before the interrogative ne, the comic poets neglect it, as in audin' ? credin' ? dabin' ? for audisne, ϑc. and Virgil avoided ending a word with this letter, and beginning the following word with the same, as, Despectus tibi sum, nec qui sim, quæris, Alexi; orators also forbade this in their compositions. Yea the ancient poets, in imitation of the Greeks, when they pleased, cut it off in the end of a word before a short, and sometimes a long, syllable in the following word, as is manifest in that of Ennius, Egregie cordatus homo catu' Ælius Sextus. And not only Ennius, Nævius, and Pacuvius do this, but even Cicero has not altogether denied himself this liberty. But though in general this sound may seem to have been unpleasant to both nations, it has without doubt in its proper place its particular graces, and the most that is said against it regards chiefly its too frequent or improper use. The Latins, in making some Greek words denizens of Rome, prefix this letter, as in scribo, smaragdus, stella, from γραφω, μαραγδος, τελλω; and even st anciently, as in stlitem, stlocum, in words of their own tongue: sometimes they interpose it, as in discus, musca, from δικω, μυια. The Greeks also in Latin names of men ending in a add this letter, as, Νομας, Φιμβριας, for Numa, Fimbria. In Tully's time, and a while after, this letter was doubled, as in caussa, cassus, for causa, casus, vid. Quint. l. 7. In conjugating Latin verbs, it is substituted for almost all the consonants, as in arsi from ardeo, tersi from tergeo, vexi for vecsi, from veho, vulsi from vello, pressi from premo, posui from pono, repsi from repo, torsi from torqueo, ussi from uro, versum from verto, as grammarians observe; but this to me seems not so much a substitution, as a servile formative power given it in Latin, as, I have observed before, it had in the Greek tongue. This semivowel, for so the Latins seem to acknowledge it, by prefixing e as they do before the other liquids, admits after it of the mutes, c, p, q, t, as in scapha, spes, squalor, stadium, but none of the liquids, except m, and that chiefly, if not only, in words derived from the Greek tongue. Concerning the intercourse between this and its neighbour R, see that letter. S. in proper names, is read Sextus; SP. Spurius. In appellatives, S. A. Secundum artem; SC. Senatusconsultum; S. P. Q. R. Senatus populusque Romanus; S. S. S. Stratum super stratum; S. V. B. E. E. Q. V. Si vales bene est, ego quoque valeo; a form used in Cicero's time, in the beginning of letters.

T.

T, t, Latin and English, whereof the former took its figure without any variation from the Greek capital, the latter, with a very small difference, from the lesser Greek character of most common use. They have indeed another small t, but rejected by the Latins, in this form ⊺, which seems rather ornamental than necessary, being chiefly used in conjunction with the other small τ. And as the Latins from the Greeks, so the Greeks borrowed theirs from the ancient Hebrew, namely, the Samaritan character of the same form; save that the transverse plank lay not quite on the top of the erect stem, but across it a little lower, thus ⊺: which very form is retained still in the smaller form of the Latin, and other cognate languages; in which figure also it was worn on the foreheads of the primitive Christians. This letter is called by the Hebrews תו tau, which signifies an extremity or bound, because it is the last in their alphabet, as also the last consonant in the Cadmean, and indeed properly the last in the more modern Greek; for φ and χ, which follow, are not properly letters, but notes expressive of two letters, and of no use in the times of the first alphabet, the former being then written by ΠΗ or ΒΗ, the latter by ΚΗ or ΓΗ; which may also be said of ψ, the compendiary note of ΠΣ, ΒΣ, and ΦΣ. In the Latin alphabet only x and z stand after it, the former an abbreviature of ΚΣ, ΓΣ, or ΧΣ; the latter of ΤΣ, ΔΣ, or ΘΣ, as will be showed more fully in the dissertation upon those two letters. To proceed; this letter has the first place in the third rank of the mutes, which admit of changes into, and perform mutual offices for, one another. These changes are indeed most frequent in the same rank, because nearest in sound to each other. Ex. gr. in the first rank p is only a softer b, and b a harder p, as in scribo, scripsi, scriptum; nubo, nupsi, nuptum: in the second order c a softer g, and g a harder c, as in tego, tecsi, tectum; jungo, junctum; which changes are plainly made only for the better sound, the harder mute before a vowel passing into the softer before a consonant; as is likewise done in the first and second conjugation of the Greeks, as in λειβω, λειπσω, λεγω, λεκσω. In this third order, indeed, these changes in forming tenses are not frequent in either of these languages, but in derivations of Latin words from Greek such a reciprocation is very common; thus, as from βατω and κατω, are derived vado and cado, so vice versâ from ενδον and μυδος are made intus and mutus. The same is observed in Latin derivatives from primitives of the same: thus, as from madeo and video are made matula and vitrum; and as in composition, for the more easy sound, d before t is constantly changed into t, as in attendo, attenuo, and their derivatives; so also from mentior and quatuor come mendax and quadra: and we may add, that our English tongue sometimes softens the Latin d into this letter, as in at, it, what, from ad, id, quod. But as all the orders have a mutual commerce with one another, this letter, though less frequently, and her sisters of the first and second order, correspond; for, as terebra is from τερετρον, so tussis from βησσω, as proceres from προτεροι, so bestia from βοσκημα. Nor do these mutual offices between this mute and the sisterhood, hinder her good correspondence with two of the liquids l and n. For as mitis is from μειλιχος, so volo, are, from πεταω, πετω; as clitello from κλινω, so pinus from πιτυς. And there is the same agreement between this letter and the solitary s in Latin words of Greek extraction, where the civilities are only mutual; for as nausea is from ναυτια, so is myrtus from μυρσινη; but in words purely Greek, t so far intruded into the property of her neighbour s, that she was forced to bring her writ of ejectment before the tribunal of the vowels, with a design to hang T on her own gibbet, as Lucian jocosely says; but being nonsuited by the prevailing power of the Athenian eloquence, meditated revenge, and made reprisals by the help of a barbarous nation, who though they left t in possession, gave her power away to s, in more instances, both in her own and the conquered Roman dominions, than she could pretend her neighbour had invaded her right, viz. that wherever t came before the third vowel, another vowel following, s, under very few restrictions, should take her power. And the grammarians, who ought to have opposed this usurpation, confirmed it; and well it was for the Greek tongue, that the Goths understood nothing of it, and the grammarians of that time very little; for how absurd had it been to have read αισια, ωσιον, for αιτια, ωτιον, &c. which would seem equally absurd in Latin, if we did not submit to a barbarous prescription. But to proceed; this mute admits after it in the beginning of pure Latin words of the liquids very seldom any other but r. The ancients, indeed, in a few words beginning with l, prefixed st, as in stlites, stlocum, for lites, locum, &c. which now is obsolete. But in Greek words not only l, but m, follow t, as in Tlepolemus, tmesis. In the beginning it takes before it in Greek words c and p, as in Ctesippus, Pteron; as also in the middle of Latin words in different syllables, as in factus, captus, as not only the dividing such words requires, but reason, for fac and cap are radical, but tus servile terminations. V.

V, v, the twentieth letter in the Latin alphabet, answers to the sixth Hebrew letter ו, and being conformable to that in power, is both a vowel and consonant; but as to its figure, it was, A. C. 306. or thereabout, thus varied, V, v, u, U, according to Dr. Bernard, in his Literature of the learned World. In the Hebrew indeed, the vowel points determine its sound; for they being under it make it a consonant, as in וּ וְלֹא יָשַׁב vau, velo, vishab; but a vowel when over it, as in יוֹם; or in the middle, as in וּבְנֵי ubene. The Greeks admit only this latter use; as also our Saxon ancestors, who commonly substitute f in the place of v, as in ꝼıꝼ ꝼeoꝼan, five, seovan, as we find in very ancient manuscripts; and sometimes u, as Leui, Levi; notwithstanding which they sounded such words as we do now, otherwise no change of the figure had been made in after times. But though they gave this letter no place in their alphabet, they admitted it among their numerals; herein imitating the Greeks, who had made it a numeral only, calling it Βαυ επισημον. To begin with the consonant: As to the figure, it is by some thought to be made from the Greek ϒ, by cutting off the shank; though the great Scaliger supposed this was rather made from that, by adding the stem: but it seems plain, the reason for this supposition was his ascribing to the Farnesian monument a higher antiquity than he ought. As to his proof from ΑΥΓΥCΤΟC being found on a Greek coin, it is very weak; because all antiquaries know, that it was not unusual for the Greeks, after they came under the Roman power, to mix Latin letters among their own in coins and inscriptions, especially in Latin words. Marius Victorinus also is against him, and Ausonius expressly says, Cecropiis ignota viris ferale sonans V. But though it be true that the Greeks had not the letter, yet it is plain that they, at least the Æolians, had the name, and gave it the same place as a numeral in their units, viz. 6, as it held in the mother alphabet, calling it Βαυ επισημον, as likewise Κοππα (90) in their tens, and Σαν πι (900) in their hundreds; being the only three Hebrew letters, צ, ק, ו, which they had no occasion for in their alphabet. Nor had they the name only, but the form also from the Hebrew ו, turning it to the right, and bowing its body, so that its appearance was somewhat like the contracted mark ϛ, which therefore is now used for it. To proceed, from the name and figure, which are only accidents, to its power, which is the essence of a letter: As it is now pronounced, I think corruptly, it is a mute of the first rank, being of a middle sound between b and f, harder than the former, and softer than the latter, aspirating Β, as Φ does Π; and according to Priscian and Donatus, is no other than the Æolian digamma. But if the digamma be the Latin F, as they will have it, and a different power make a different letter, as surely it does, F and V are two different sounds, and consequently different letters. This is plain from our own tongue, for we neither sound nor write knifes, or lifes, though we do knife and life; I mean, as now pronounced; for it is very likely that before a vowel in the same syllable, both in the primitive and derivative tongues, it had the sound of our w in the same position, as in wall, wen, wine, worm, from vallum, vena, vinum, vermis. Vid. Scal. Not. ad Euseb. et Lips. de L. L. pronunciatione. Yea, in Latin words, after g, q, and s, we give it the sound of w; as in lingva, seqvor, svadeo, where v is melted indeed into the vowel following, but strengthens the sound. That it is not purely a vowel, its resolution into a vowel, frequently made by the poets, seems to evince; as in solit, Catull. syluæ, Hor. This consonant precedes any vowel in the beginning, middle, or end of words. It is easily changed into its sister mutes, p, and b: for as from ovis opilio, dubius qu. duvius; so from verpus vervex, from γιλβος gilvus. Thus much may suffice for the name, figure, and sound of the consonant in the ancient Latin. We proceed to the sound of the vowel, as now distinct from the consonant both in figure and power. The inconvenience of expressing two different sounds by the same letter, was observed by Claudius Cæsar, who endeavoured to remove it, by introducing ⅁ the Æolian digamma instead of it; which in public records obtained a while. But a very useful, though late, invention has applied an effectual remedy, by taking from the former the vocal, and from the latter the consonant, power; so that now U is a vowel when it makes a syllable alone, or comes before a consonant in the same syllable: and as such has a mutual intercourse with all the vowels. For as from κυλιξ calix, from μυδαω madeo; so from καπαλος capulus, from κραιπαλη crapula: as from ιβυξ ibex, from ἑκυρος socer; so from νεφος nubes, from σκοπελος scopulus. As from φυω fio, from ϛυφω stipo; so from γλια gluten, from χαρις carus: as from αγκυρα anchora, from νυξ nox; so from φωρ fur, from αμοργη amurca. As solvit dissolved is soluit, silva silua; so nervus from νευρον. Nor is it only related to the vowels, but to the diphthongs also. Thus fuscus from φαιος, curro from καιρω, lagæna comes from λαγυνον, a לַגִּין sextarius. By this letter also sometimes the Greek ϐ is expressed in Latin, as duplus from διπλοῦς, Urania from Οὐρανια, u being equipollent in sound to that diphthong, as Maurus Terentianus, v. 150. or Terentianus Maurus, has observed, saying, Οὐ literis nostris vacat, quod hunc V compleat satis sonum; which seems rather adapted to the vowel, than the consonant, sound of this letter, according to the modern pronunciation. But if we admit, as was before hinted, that V in Latin was sounded as our W, the difference in sound is not so great. In gerunds and participles, this vowel was by the ancients substituted for e; as, ad faciundum; mos gerundus est; as also in many adjectives of the superlative degree, this custom generally obtained till C. Cæsar's time, when they first began to write by the middle vowel, optimus maximus, for optumus, maxumus, as we learn from Quinctilian, l. 1. 7. Significant notes with the initial V. V. X.

X, x, Latin, Ξ, ξ, Greek. This letter, though, both in the alphabetical series and as a numeral, it answers to the Hebrew ס denoting sixty in that tongue, as this does in Greek, yet undoubtedly in power comes nearer the harder sound of ש, schin, which probably stood most anciently in this place, till it was usurped by the introduction of the secondary ס. It has not only the power, but the form of ש also, being made by erecting the plane or flat, and turning it to the right, to comply with the western way of writing. The Hebrews call it schin, i. e. a tooth, from its dental figure; and if you prostrate ξ thus ω, you will perfectly see the teeth of a saw. The name Ξι also, as well as the power and sound, is taken from schin, by removing the last consonant, analogically to what the Greeks did in adopting other letters, or rather by anastrophe, cs for sc. For as from mem and nun are made my, ny, so from schin is made xi. The Latin letter takes its power, and name indeed, from the Greek; but its form is the same with the capital Greek X Ch, and is sometimes resolved into it, as in ακρονυχος, qu. ακρη νυξ; and from future tenses in εω, are formed preter tenses in χα, as πλεκω, πεπλεχα, λεξω, λελεχα: and that into this; the Attics saying διξα and τριξα, for διχα and τριχα. It is a double consonant, compounded of the second order of the mutes, κ, γ, χ, and the formative σ; as in πλεκω, πλεξω; λεγω, λεξω; εχω, εξω. The ancient Attics long used the single letters, writing πλεκω, λεγω, εχω: and the ancient Æolians never used this conjunction, as neither did the Romans universally: for Nigidius Figulus, who, next to Varro, was in greatest reputation for his learning, refused to use it at all, as Victorinus acquaints us. And Fabius, Inst. Or. 1. 4. says, they might have been without it. For all words might have been written as we find apecs, gregs. And Cicero tells us, it was left out in many words, to give them an easier sound; as in ala, velum, &c. for axilla, vexillum, &c. The later Athenians, on the other hand, used ξ instead of σ, especially in the beginning of words, as tempering the serpentine hiss of σ, which grated upon their ears, as I have shown in my dissertation on that letter. And the Dorians also imitated them in the end of words; as in ορνιξ for ορνις, κλαξ for κλεις. This also they did in the futures and first aorists of verbs baryton of the fourth conjugation; as in καθιξω, εκαθιξα, for καθισω, εκαθισα, &c. On the other hand, the Latins sometimes substituted this letter for the Greek final ς, writing pistrix and Ajax for πιστρις and Αιας. This double letter, in declining nouns, often loses its s, as in fax, facis; rex, regis; crux, crucis. In numerals it expresses ten, whence in old Roman manuscripts it is used for denarius, and as such seems to be made of V and ⅄ joined, i. e. twice five. X. P. Decem pondo, or decem pedes; XV. Decemvir.

Y.

Y, y, a Greek vowel, the figure whereof Palamedes is said to have taken from the flight of cranes, according to Philostratus; but surely this must be a mistake as to Palamedes, because we find it in the Sigean monument still in being, graven when the Greeks had only the sixteen letters which Cadmus brought into Greece. The two horns, as the old epigram calls them, or branches, as Persius, were chosen by Pythagoras to demonstrate the easy descent to vice on the left, and the difficult ascent to virtue on the right; from whence it is called his letter. The ancient figure plainly shows, that the Latin V was taken from it, being exactly the same with it in figure. And perhaps V was anciently by the Latins substituted for it, as we may see in many words; as in cubus, duo, mus, sus, ruo, &c. from κυβος, δυω, &c. and this they did anciently in words that were afterwards written by the y, as in Musia, Suria, for Mysia, Syria: but the instances in these words are fewer. It is certain the Latin V had in many words a deeper sound than the Greek V, and therefore not the same letter, but nearer to their ου, forasmuch as Ρωτος, Ιωνιος, were written by the Greeks for Brutus, Junius: yea the ancient Latins wrote ou for u long, as in loumen, joure, for lumen, jure. The Latins have no capital of this letter, because they do not want it: for the Greeks aspirate all words beginning with υ; but the Romans owning an aspiration for a letter, as indeed it is, and always was with them, prefix h before such words as they take, or borrow, from them, and therefore are all marshalled under it. But the smaller y they have from the Greek Υ, by obliquating its stem, and use it in the middle and end of words, as in Cayster, corymbus; or end, as onyx, martyr. Our mother tongue, in the beginning of words and syllables, admits it as a consonant, as in yarn, yeast, yoke, unyoked, but otherwise as a vowel.

Z.

Z, ζ, Greek; Z, z, when borrowed by the Latins to express Greek words; ז Hebrew. This letter is called a double consonant, whereof the Greeks have three, Ξ, Ψ, and Ζ: the two former were of later invention, but this stood in the ancient alphabet, as appears by the citation of Pliny, Lib. vii. c. 56. out of Aristotle, notwithstanding the corrupt reading even in the best edition of Pliny, where Ξ is put for Z, and Z for Ξ, as the learned Salmasius observed, and after him the great Spanhemius. This mistake seems purely to have been occasioned by the Roman librarians, who mistook the one for the other. The ancient figure of this letter was Ⅲ, and by obliquating the perpendicular has its present form. Its sound, now unknown, was between the Phenician zain and the Latin G; which, though late, took its original from thence. Hence G is sometimes changed into it, as in ολιζον, which the Ionians used for ολιγον; and φυζω for φυγω. So the Dorians wrote ζευω for γευω. The Latins also used indifferently zingiber or gingiber, for the Arabian word written by the Greeks ζιγγιβερι. That this letter had a very sweet sound, is certain from the authority of Dion. Halicarnassius, Περι συνθεσεως ονοματων. And Fabius supposed that the Romans could never arrive at the sweetness of the Greek elocution, because it wanted y and z, which he calls the sweetest of all their letters, Inst. Or. XII. c. 10. For which reason, one would think, it could not have the sound of a double consonant. For if it were pronounced as the Æolians and Dorians wrote δσ, or σδ, as in δσυγος for ζυγος, δσευς or σδευς for ζευς, τραπεσδα for τραπεζα, &c. it must be very hard, especially when a consonant followed, as ζμερδνος, smilaces. Its Hebrew mother ז is certainly a single consonant, as also in our English tongue, where we sometimes join two of them together, as muzzle, puzzle, &c. The Latins likewise often put d for g, or this letter, as in nidor, from κνιζα; harpago, from ἁρπαζω. The Greeks change it also into σ, as in the first future tense of the fourth conjugation; or rather exclude it before the formative σ, as in σωζω, σωσω. The Latins indeed often put ss for it, as in patrisso, pitisso, from πατριζω, πιτιζω: and sometimes also substitute j, as being near in sound to g, as in jugum, from ζυγος. In Greek numerals it notes VII. though it be only the sixth letter, because ϛ is interposed in the numerical alphabet.

REI ANTIQUARIÆ STUDIOSIS ET BENEVOLENTIBUS S.

In hoc tamen aliam ab illo institi viam: Ille formam kalendarii veteris non dedit; ego literis majusculis, et scripturæ compendiis, quibus kalendaria prisca ad hanc usque diem adservantur in tabulis et lapidibus exscripta, dedi: ille nudos dedit fastos; ego notis ex antiquis scriptoribus, vel recentiorum commentariis, quæ ad res ipsas, vel ad rerum certos dies designandos, pertinere videbantur, illustratos. Quæ quidem notæ pleræque, ingenuum enim est profiteri per quem profeceris, quatenus semestre Ovidii (hei nobis! quis enim sine dolore alterius semestris damnum commemorare potest?) doctissimum opus respiciunt, copiosissimis illis eruditissimi viri Car. Neapolis debentur; quas tamen pro ratione brevitatis institutæ contraxi. In posterioribus sex mensibus, ubi macrior erat seges, undecumque licebat, excerpsi.

Ovidii fastos semestres kalendario veteri subjeci, quo illorum ab hoc discrepantia melius appareret, deinde quo tironibus ad antiquitates et historiam Romanam patentior fieret aditus, cum brevibus his notis, et doctissimi viri, qui locupletissimos Indices ad auctores classicos attexuit, calendario fastibus Ovidianis præmisso, adjuti essent. Dolet, profecto quidem perdolet, fastos hos in scholis minus tritos quam cæteri poetæ libri, cum sint omnium lectu dignissimi, omnium doctissimi, omnium denique utilissimi.

Alios dies fastos ex kalendariis publici juris nuper factis addidisse licuit, sed, unde desumptis, cum ego nescirem, neque illorum editores ipsi dicerent, supersedi. Egone, cui in minimis credi non postulem, in rebus gravissimis, quales sunt annalium res et certa tempora, meâ fide solâ, publice quidquam ut darem? pessime certe illud libro concineret, cujus in appendiculis hoc kalendarium dedi, in quo quidem libro, ne ullum quidem vocabulum auctoritate suâ destitueretur, sedulo cavi.

Cum mensium numerus Cæsareus numero deorum consentium responderet, singulos in singulorum deorum tutelâ esse voluerunt Romani, quas quidem tutelas Kalendario Rustico notatas in cujusque mensis capite inde exscripsi; et cum eâdem de causâ signa Zodiaci eorumdem tutelæ supponerentur, atque ortûs et occasûs eorum in kalendariis fiat frequens mentio, tutelas illas versibus Manilianis constrictas hîc apponere visum est.

Horum et aliorum siderum ortus et occasus, quorum in kalendario Romano duplicem usum mire, ut omnia, describit Virgilius, Geor. 1. 204. ex Columellâ exscripsi, cum in sex mensibus posterioribus ab Ovidio non doceantur; et nonnunquam etiam ad convenientiam et discrepantiam inter se denotandam, ex Plinio. Verum Columellam præcipue sequi visum est, quoniam ille ex professo astrologiæ studuit, librosque contra astrologos composuit.

Non est ut apud vos vetustatis peritos quidquam de fastis dicam, aliquid tantum de eorum origine tangam, cum explicatio ex scriptoribus Romanis et recentiorum commentariis petenda sit.

Numam secundum regem Romanorum pleraque, quæ in fastos postea relata sunt, instituisse, speciatimque fastos nefastosque dies fecisse, auctorem habemus Livium, Lib. 1. cap. 19. Sed an in tabulas æneas incisa, et in ærarium publicum condita fuerint, ante xii Tabb. confectionem, A. U. C. CCCIV, non perinde est certum. Post quem quidem annum, pontifices, quibus solis ex Numæ instituto omnia, quæ ad leges, deorumque cæremonias et cultum pertinebant, credita a principio fuerant, fastorum tabulam occultatam penes se servabant, specie quidem honoris, sed et fortasse lucri, ut dies agendi peterentur a paucis, et posse agi necne scirent pauci, quoniam fastos vulgo non habebant. Tandem A. U. C. CCCXLIX. C. Flavius Cn. F. scribi fastos circa forum in albo proposuit, ut quando lege agi posset, sciretur. Hæc fere ex Cicerone pro Murenâ, et Liv. lib. 9. cap. 46. Sed quid vos diutius teneam? Quidquid in hoc kalendario sit a me peccatum, ut est humanum, humanitati vestræ ignoscendum et corrigendum relinquo, plurimasque vobis in literarum bonarum decus et profectum calendas ex animo voveo.

MENSES Romani in calendas, (vel kalendas,) nonas, et idus dividebant; ordinem vero retro numerandi exhibet sequens calendarium. Cæteri omnes Nefasti erant, non ita tamen ut in illis conciones habere, causas orare, et leges promulgare non liceret.

JANUARIUS.

A Jano antiquissimo Italiæ rege nomen habet, Ovid. Fast. I. 64. Numa enim, qui ad solis cursum annum direxit, postquam duos menses Romuli calendario addidisset, hunc illi honorem haberi voluit, quod Janum solem antiquitas crederet, vel quod Janus antiquissimus Italiæ rex fuisset. Utrumque vero mensem Martio præposuit, hunc, quod rebus civilibus et reipublicæ administrandæ intentior pacem bello potiorem; illum, quod lustrationibus et Deorum religionibus præcipue deditus, Deorum cultu nihil antiquius judicaret. Alii a Januâ deductum nomen existimant, quod sit mensium janua; sed hoc eodem redit, cum janua sit a Jano. Mensis tamen Tutelam Junoni olim attributam fuisse, ut Dearum principi, ex calendario vetere rustico docemur, unde et reliquorum mensium Tutelæ sumuntur. In calendariis Romuli et Cæsaris est XXXI dierum, Numæ XXIX.

MARTIUS.

Hunc mensem in Romuli Calendario primas obtinere non est mirum; cui enim rectius quam Patri suo, Patriæque, initium anni mensiumque et Calendas ipsas consecrare debuit? Nam, uti æquum fuit, Martem ante omnes coluisse priores, docet Ovidius, Fast. 2. 39. Imo vel hinc apparet in Latio tam ante quam post urbem conditam Martem cultum fuisse, quamquam non eodem mensium ordine. Martius enim in Fastis antiquis erat Albanis, Aricinis, et Tusculanis ordine tertius; Forensibus et Peliguis quartus; Faliscis et Laurentibus quintus; Hernicis sextus; Æquicolis decimus. Vid. Ovid. Fast. 3. 85. et Censorin. de Die Natali. Unde forte quis conjiciat communem Latii fuisse Deum, neque aliâ ratione Romanis proprium, quam quod Romuli pater crederetur. Primum autem a Jove honorem Marti habebant, uti ex aliis, tum ex voto Vell. Paterculi in fine operis patet.

APRILIS.

In Romuli Calendario mensis anni secundus, Numæ et Cæsaris quartus, dictus est; ut aliqui volunt, ab Ἀφρος, spuma, unde Ἀφροδιτη, Venus spumea vel marina, cui quidem opinioni favere videtur Horatius, Carm. 4. 11. 15; quamquam notationem certiorem facilioremque ipse Latinum suppeditat, nempe ut Aprilis quasi Aperilis, ab aperiendo, dicatur, quæ est Varronis sententia, quæ ex eo confirmari videtur, quod reliquorum mensium vocabula omnia sunt originis Latinæ. Etsi non est diffitendum, Varronem, L. L. 4. in antiquis literis affirmare se nomen Veneris nusquam invenisse, et ante illum, Cincium in libro Fastorum, nullam Veneris laudem, sicut cæterorum cœlestium, in Saliorum carminibus celebratam, scriptum reliquisse. Sed quomodocumque ea res se habet, Romuli saltem temporibus satis notam Venerem fuisse vel ex Calendario patet, ubi secundum locum possidet, ex Romuli consilio, ut primum quidem mensem a patre suo nominaret, secundum ab Æneæ matre, ita ut hi et potissimum anni principia servarent, a quibus esset Romani nominis origo; unde et Romulus Pater, et Venus Genetrix dicitur. Hæc fere ex Macrobio. Hujus tamen mensis sive virentem, sive Venereum honorem delibavit Nero imperator, cognomentum a se accipere jubens, vid. Tac. Ann. 15. 74. et 16. 12; mox tamen cum ipso pereunte, pristinum nomen decusque rediit. In Veneris tutelâ est hic mensis, et in Romuli et Cæsaris Calendario xxx dierum, Numæ xxix.

MAIUS.

De hujus mensis appellatione inter veteres scriptores parum convenit. Tres hujus vocabuli rationes adfert Ovidius, primam a Majestate, secundam a Majoribus, tertiam a Maiâ Mercurii matre, in principio lib. 5. quarum primam, quam singularem esse opinor, infirmissimam judico. Nam quæ tanta P. R. majestas, cum hoc nomen huic mensi primum imponeretur! Mensium etiam nomina non dedisse Romanos, sed a Latinis accepisse, arbitratur Varro, et speciatim quidem hunc mensem a Tusculanis in Fastos Romanos transiisse quosdam arbitratos narrat Macrob. Sat. I. 12; cui etiam opinioni favet Festus, Maium mensem in compluribus civitatibus Latinis ante urbem conditam existimans. Quin et ipse Ovidius non uno loco mensium nomina Urbe antiquiora esse innuit. Vid. quæ ad Martium præfati sumus. Postrema nominis causa Ovidio memorata, nempe Maii Vocabulum a Maiâ Mercurii matre sumptum fuisse, eo præcipue argumento nititur, quod Maiæ his Calendis sub nomine Bonæ Deæ dedicatum esset templum, et filio suo Idibus, qui fuit ejus natalis. His rationibus assensum non negarem, nisi secundam nominis causam ab Ovidio ex Fulvii Nobilioris Fastis, quos in templo Herculis Musarum reposuit, sumptam intelligerem. Quibus quidem Fastis hæc fere continentur: "Postquam Romulus populum in majores minoresque divisisset, quo altera pars armis, altera consilio rempublicam tueretur, in honorem utriusque partis hunc Maium, sequentem Junium nominavit." Hic mensis quoque injuste nomine veteri exutus a Nerone, narrante Tacito, Ann. 16. 12. 2. Claudius appellatus fuit, in honorem Claudii, sed brevi post, vindiciis factis, honore nominis pristini indutus fuit; in tutelâ Apollinis erat hic mensis, et in Romuli, Numæ, et Cæsaris Calendariis xxxi dierum.

SEPTEMBRIS.

A numero loci, quem in Romuli Calendario tenuit, dictus est hic mensis, teste Varrone, qui omnes menses a Junio ad Decembrem usque a numero appellatos scribit, L. L. 5. Plures imperatores post datum S. C. Julio et Augusto Cæsaribus Quintilis et Sextilis de suis nominibus appellationis honorem proximi mensis hujus mire ambiebant vocabulum. Tiberius quidem Cæsar, quod unum saltem ei in honorem cedit, a senatu oblatum modeste recusavit, Suet. in vitâ, cap. 26. Domitianus cum jam adulatione temporum Fasti fœdati essent, uti discimus ex Tacito, Hist. 4. 40. 3. ex titulo Germanici ambitiose assumpto Germanicum, Macrob. Sat. 1. 12. appellari voluit, quâ quidem mensis appellatione fœdissime illi adblanditur Mart. Epig. 9. 2. Sed infausto hoc vocabulo statim a morte ejus ex omni ære et lapide eraso antiquum mensis nomen recepit. Commodus deinde ex titulo suo Herculem appellari jussit, quod ipse pro Hercule Romano, uti docent monumenta, et nummi passim obvii, se venditabat; cum sciret paulo ante Antoninum Pium tam se quam conjugem Faustinam ab hoc honore abstinuisse: Decretum enim fuerat a senatu, ut Septembris Antoninus, Octobris Faustinus, appellaretur. Tacitus denique honoris hujus avidissimus, quod hoc mense tam natus quam factus Imperator fuerat, appellationem mensis hujus ad se rapuit, Vopisc. in vitâ, sed brevi admodum retinuit; atque ita pristinum mensi servatum est nomen, quod etiamnum manet. Septembris in tutelâ Vulcani positus est, et in Calendario Numæ est dierum xxix. Romuli et Cæsaris xxx.

OCTOBRIS.

A numero, quem in Romuli Kalendario tenebat, hic mensis nomen habet, quo tamen ambitio principum spoliatum ibat; et spoliabat quidem, sed ad breve tempus, Domitianus, qui ex suo nomine, quoniam vigesimo hujus mensis natus esset, appellari voluit, quo tamen interfecto, uti dixi in præcedente, pristinum nomen brevi rediit; et postea Commodus, qui cum omnium mensium nomina transmutaret, ex suis agnominibus nova impositurus, hunc mensem Invictum, qui ipse Hercules Romanus vocari voluit, appellabat, quamquam sciret Antoninum Pium a tali honore tam se quam conjugem Faustinam abstinuisse; decretum enim fuerat a senatu, ut September Antoninus, et hic Faustinus, vocaretur, Capitolinus, in vitâ. Hic mensis in tutelâ Martis fuit, et in omnibus Kalendariis xxxi dierum.

A loco, quem in vetustissimo Romuli Kalendario tenebat, nomen retinet hic mensis, uti duo præcedentes, et qui consequitur nullâ principum ambitione vexatus, ut priores, nisi unius Commodi, qui Exsuperatorium dici voluit. Sed hoc non perinde mirum est, cum vanissimus ille princeps cæterorum omnium mensium nomina, tam diis quam imperatoribus honore exutis, mutaret, quo titulis et ambitioni suæ unice litaret, uti testatur Ælius Lampridius, in vitâ ejus. In Dianæ tutelâ fuisse hunc mensem ex Kalendario Rustico discimus. Ex Romuli et Cæsaris ordinatione XXX dies habuit, Numæ XXIX.

Upon this success Capua, Tarentum, and all the south and east coasts of Italy, revolted to him; but as he was not recruited by fresh troops or supplies, and the Romans acted cautiously and on the defensive, his affairs gradually declined, though he obtained many new victories over Cn.
